Targeted overpayment identification—led by clinical experts—to increase oversight and determine reimbursement.

Are the complexities of genetic testing claims overwhelming your plan, making it difficult to control costs?

Many health plans struggle to navigate the intricacies of genetic tests, which are complicated by increased popularity, volume of available tests, demand for extensive policy coverage updates, and timely evaluation and payment of claims. The increased demand for testing has resulted in backlog and skepticism about test coverage based on physician recommendations; and gray areas in clinical use impede quick determination of clinical validity. A strategy including increased oversight to ensure appropriateness and validity of genetic testing helps mitigate the risk of payment errors and billing abuse, but most plans cannot accomplish this alone.

Audit Advantage for genetic testing leverages the knowledge of our dedicated provider audit team, our expertise determining clinical validity of genetic tests, and partnerships with national and regional health plans, as well as CMS for RAC Regions 1 and 5, to provide guidance to gain control of evaluating genetic testing claims and facilitate the return of overpayments made to providers for unnecessary tests and tests not approved by plan policy. Performant's expert team of registered nurses, certified coders, claims auditors, and analysts, working under medical director oversight, ensures genetic tests are clinically valid and correctly billed, and identifies overpayments for recovery. We review medical records and other source documentation for each claim, prepare findings, and validate the presence of inaccurate billing and overpayments, enabling the plan to recoup lost capital.

Performant's Audit Advantage workflow offers customization at key steps to ensure our program best integrates with the plan's existing audit process.
